Later this month a new boutique property called The Betsy arrives on Miami Beach's Ocean Drive. Originally opened in the 1942 rush of wartime patriotism as the Betsy Ross (and now on the National Register of Historic Places), the 63-room, whitewashed spot is the drive's only surviving example of the architectural style known as Florida Georgian. Its interior designers have worked on homes for Ralph Lauren and shops for Bulgari and here they play up the past with plantation shutters and fans—a complete departure from the Art Deco and Miami modern styles of so much of the beach.
