Coopertown is a small unincorporated area just outside of Miami Beach with a large sign that announces the population to be only eight. Coopertown is famous for serving gator tail and frog legs at it's one restaurant, and for being the first in the area to offer air-boat tours. Tourists still visit Coopertown to take rides through nine miles of the everglades with professional air-boat guides to catch glimpses of alligators and visit points of interest such as Hardwood Hammock, a small island in the river grass. Although Coopertown has no hotels, towns such as Miami Beach and Coral Gables are just a few miles away, offering many lodging options.
